ABSTRACT

This bibliography, compiled by a college librarian with the assistance of 11 college instructors, contains the core of current English-language publications in archaeology, suitable for a small college that may not train professional archaeologists but that supports coursework and supplies general interest reading material on the topic in its library. The 83 books on the list were selected using criteria of integrity, currency, readability, attractiveness, and price, and cost approximately $800. The titles are arranged alphabetically by author in the following subject areas: general works; philosophy and religion; civilization and archaeology; history; the Americas; North America; geography and anthropology; art; language arts; science; and technology. Each entry includes 1978 price, Library of Congress card order number, and when available, International Standard Book Number; all titles were in print as of July 1978. Appendices list 29 out of print books of value to archaeology and 39 other books considered semi-finalists in the main selection. (MB)

What books in the field of archaeology should appear in the small college library? How should the selection of such titles be made? Would the making of such a bibliography be relevant to the purposes of the National Endowment for the Humanities Seminar, Archaeology; Perspectives on Prehistory?

These were the primary considerations of a college librarian privileged to join forces with eleven other college instructors (See Appendix B) at the University of California at Los Angeles, working under the direction of Clement W. Meighan of the Department of Anthropology, meeting June 19 through August 11, 1978.

The bibliography being presented contains the core of current publications suitable for a college that may not train professional archaeologists but supports coursework and supplies general interest reading material on the topic in its library. The compiler spent eight weeks in the University Research Library investigating English language titles that met the criteria of integrity, currency, readability, attractiveness and price.

In conducting such a search, the bibliographer frequently has a starting place in the form of a previous compilation. No listing in archaeology for the small college library was discovered in the literature of the preceding decade. To generate a basic pool of titles, the author circulated an informal questionnaire among the other participants (see Appendix A). Searching the subject categories in the University Research Library card catalog, Library of Congress Subject Headings, Subject Guide to Books in Print, and Subject Guide to Forthcoming Books in Print yielded some 500 titles. More were uncovered in such bibliographic tools as Books in Series, Guide to Reprints, Paperbound Books in Print, Paperback Books, British Books in Print and other national bibliographies. Several of the sources were unfamiliar to the author or not available at her home library.

Candidates for inclusion numbered 509, of which 37 proved to be duplicate suggestions from Seminar members. Of the remaining 532 titles, 407 were found to be in print. The University Research Library card catalog indicated that 301 of the 407 had been acquired with 12 of the titles awaiting full processing. Of 125 titles selected as semi-finalists (See Appendix D) 51 were not available for the compiler to examine. The final list of 80 English language titles represents only those in the following categories:

1. There were at least two votes from seminar participants by the July 18 cut-off date

2. The book was selected after being examined on the shelf

3. The title was recommended by a Seminar lecturer

4. It appeared in the bibliography of a respected publication

5. It was part of a publisher's series noted for excellence in the field, or

6. The title previously had been found useful by the author.

The preliminary list of titles has been reviewed by the participants and suggestions made for polishing the final bibliography (see Addendum). Titles are arranged by Library of Congress classification schedules with current price, Library of Congress card order number and, when available, International Standard Book Number. A librarian using the list can be sure all titles were in print as of July, 1978.

The question remains as to the relevancy of such a list to the goals of the Seminar. Improvement of undergraduate instruction was one of the goals. The late Dr. Wayne Shirley in a 1969 library workshop in Corvallis, Oregon, stated that undergraduate teaching suffered because instructors taught from the same books they learned from. If a professor discovers even one new teaching tool on the list, there is a possibility that better teaching may result.

A second aim was to provide time and resources for the instructor who had been removed from a large university library for a number of years. In the author's case, this goal was met and exceeded. A minimum of 240 hours of library study went into the making of the attached list and visits were made to 10 of the other libraries on campus.

An unexpected benefit accrued to the author in the very open acceptance by the other participants of the non-classroom-teacher/librarian in their midst. They were generous in suggesting titles for the bibliography, each one contributing at least a few titles (and one listing over 100!) before the cut-off date. When new editions of favorite reference, textual or reserve reading books were brought to their attention by the author, there was interest and appreciation manifested that was unmistakeable.

It seems relevant to the Seminar topic that 1978's participants be encouraged to press publishers to reprint out of print titles or to urge paperback editions of others. Their professional pressure may result in reviving some classics (See Appendix C) or in eliciting revision of an outdated work.

It is felt by the librarian that several of the papers presented in the Seminar might be publishable if expanded. Time permitting, the author plans to distribute lists of reprint houses and publishers of series in archaeology. Brochures describing ERIC were passed to each member, in hopes that dissemination of the papers might be wider.

What of the list itself? The compiler strove to include titles that touch upon the romance and mystery of archaeology, as well as those that attempt to bring the reader in contact with the everyday life of early man. In light of the current surge in interest in the field, even the smallest college library must furnish some breadth of materials to nurture that interest.

The 80 titles being presented for the small college library include some expensive books. Librarians making use of the list must decide as to an upper limit on price. Several titles by the same authors are listed in order to offer choice to the librarian seeking to expand holdings in archaeology. The task of listing documents and pamphlets will have to fall to someone with continued wide access to searching materials. The promised list of periodicals has not been included. There are no annotations.

Weighing in the original handicaps of integrity, attractiveness, availability, usefulness and the need to be in English, one sees that keeping a title in the running has involved some hurdles. The compiler must admit a bias toward recency stemming from experience with undergraduates in a small college. The new book is the favored book. Other biases may have manifested themselves despite efforts to subdue them. Response from both the library and the archaeology communities as to the credibility and usefulness of the selections will be welcomed by the compiler. It is the author's intention to prepare an updated list in 1979, indicating which titles have gone out of print and to what extent prices have risen. (The attached list weighs in at just over $800.00).

Subject: Archaeology: A Basic Collection for the Small College Library

Help! Tuesday, July 18, 1978 has to be my cut-off date for book titles from you. I won't need formal citations, just some clues of books which have been useful to you.

There may be a chance to slip in a few more before the final draft in early August, but I really can't count on that. Non-Rieber residents' contributions are especially cherished, since I don't see you as often.

I have attached a statement of criteria.

What more can I say than THANK YOU !

ARCHAEOLOGY: A BASIC COLLECTION FOR THE SMALL COLLEGE LIBRARY

Statement of Criteria

It is my aim to present you with a source book, with suggestions for reference, text, informational, recreational and sensational books, periodicals and documents on pre-history. I hope to include only books that are in print, but will mention series that reprint books in our field, and publishers that sometimes issue out-of-print hardcover books in paperback. I hope to have an up-to-date list of 16 mm films, filmstrips, transparency sets and slide sets that might be useful in teaching Archaeology. Perhaps, I will be lucky in tracking down a source of artifact replicas, as well.

Criteria for inclusion of books? Integrity , availability, usefulness, quality and number of illustrations, level of difficulty and price. In the case of periodicals, indexing must be available for use in the small college library. Titles not specifically devoted to Archaeology will be given mention, as current interest in "popular Archaeology" is rising and evidences itself on the pages of several respectable other-than-professional journals.

I don't yet know how many titles there will be. I know that the areas of interest to be covered are more than I once thought. I know that any list must include stratigraphy, aerial photogrammetry, amulets, cliff-dwellings, the Minoans, pyramids, Dead Sea scrolls, the Mayan, the Aztecs, the Olmecs, and the Eskimos, as well as underwater Archaeology, Carbon 14 dating, dendrochronology, flotation and pollen analysis, Mogollon and Mimbres pottery, Schleimann and Evans and Carter, not to mention King Tut and Akhnaten.

A list without those and others...the theory of history, early agriculture, man and nature, evolution, the ice age, the land bridge from Asia, gems, glassmaking, burial customs...that list will not be good enough for even the small library.

So it may take a little longer and a lot of help, before I can say, "I've got it covered!"
